Course Overview

Accidental counsellors are people who may not have formal qualifications or counselling experience but find they are placed in a counselling role by accident, as a result of requests for help from friends, colleagues, clients or others. This course will introduce participants to basic listening skills to meet the immediate needs of a person in a state of crisis. This workshop is not an introductory counseling course but rather will prepare participants to respond appropriately when a person presents as distressed. Topics covered by this workshop include situational assessment, qualities of effective listeners, limit setting and boundaries, responding in a crisis, debriefing and self care.

This one day workshop will cover:

- Recognition of when someone in crisis is in need of immediate assistance
- Active listening skills to adopt limited questioning frameworks and procedural questions
- Providing support to clients when they are anxious, angry or using challenging behaviour
- Reflecting on personal values and beliefs and how they influence the way we offer support to others
- Setting boundaries and limits yet still maintain an appropriate level of involvement
- Debriefing and self care after emotionally-charged interactions

Who is this workshop suitable for?

Front-line service providers and non-clinical staff working in health and community services who interface with vulnerable people.

By the end of this workshop participants will be able to:

- Recognise situations where accidental counsellor skills are required and assess the appropriate response
- Use effective communication skills to identify the primary issue of concern requiring a response
- Respond appropriately within the boundaries of roles and responsibilities and determine the appropriate level of involvement
- Evaluate individual responses and reactions to situations and reflect on personal impacts
- Identify relevant organisational policies and procedures including the reporting and documentation of incidents
- Identify indicators of where stressful situations have impacted and understand the importance of self care strategies, supervision and debriefing
